At the Table

Wine grew up next to the kitchen, so the surest match for a bottle is often the dish that has been cooked in the same place for generations. For every region in this atlas you will find one local plate here, and the reason it gets along with the wine the book points you to.

France

Bordeaux 20

Entrecôte à la bordelaise (rib steak in a red wine sauce). A thick rib steak arrives under a glossy sauce of red Bordeaux, shallots and beef marrow. The richness of the sauce softens the firm tannins of a Left Bank red from Pauillac or Saint-Julien.

Burgundy, Côte d'Or 24

Bœuf bourguignon (beef stewed in red Burgundy). Beef soaks in red Bourgogne, then cooks slowly in that same wine until it is tender enough to cut with a spoon. A village Pinot Noir from the slope brings the bright acidity the dark sauce needs.

Chablis and Beaujolais 26

Chablis: gougères (goo-ZHAIR), warm cheese puffs and Burgundy's classic aperitif. Their salty, airy bite makes a lean Chablis taste even fresher.

Beaujolais: andouillette beaujolaise, a rustic sausage made with veal tripe, a tradition shared with nearby Lyon. A lightly chilled Fleurie or Morgon carries its richness on bright red fruit.

Champagne 28

Chaource (shah-OORSS), a soft cow's milk cheese. It has been made since the Middle Ages around the village of Chaource, south of Troyes, where Champagne meets Burgundy. Its creamy center and downy rind love the bubbles and chalky edge of a Blanc de Blancs.

The Loire 30

Crottin de Chavignol (kroh-TAN duh shah-vee-NYOHL), a small goat's milk cheese. Chavignol is a hamlet in the Sancerre hills, so cheese and wine grow side by side. The tang of the goat's milk echoes the citrus and cut grass of a Sancerre.

The Rhône 32

Picodon (pee-koh-DOHN), a little disc of goat's milk cheese. It is made in the hills of the Drôme and the Ardèche, on both banks of the middle Rhône. A peppery Crozes-Hermitage or a warm Côtes du Rhône stands up to its tangy taste.

Languedoc-Roussillon and Provence 34

Languedoc: cassoulet, white beans baked for hours with pork, sausage and duck; the town of Castelnaudary claims it as its own. A sturdy red of Grenache, Syrah and Carignan matches its weight.

Provence: bouillabaisse (boo-yah-BESS), the fishermen's stew of Marseille, made with rockfish and served with the broth on the side and a garlicky rouille. A crisp Provence rosé keeps up with the garlic without hiding the fish.

Alsace 36

Choucroute garnie (shoo-KROOT gar-NEE), sauerkraut dressed with meats. Fermented cabbage is braised with wine and crowned with sausages and smoked pork. A dry Alsace Riesling matches the sourness of the cabbage and lightens the meat.

Jura, Savoie and the Southwest 37

Jura: Comté (kohn-TAY), the region's great mountain cheese. Aged Comté and Vin Jaune share a nutty, salty taste, and the Jura treats them as a pair.

Savoie: fondue savoyarde, Beaufort, Comté and Savoie Emmental melted with dry Savoie white. Pour the same crisp Jacquère in the glass.

The Southwest: confit de canard, duck legs cooked slowly and kept in their own fat, a specialty from Gascony to the Quercy around Cahors. The firm tannin of a Cahors Malbec or a Madiran cuts the richness.

Italy

Piedmont 40

Brasato al Barolo (beef braised in Barolo). A cold-weather dish of beef cooked for hours in Barolo. A glass of the same Nebbiolo, with its grip and acidity, cuts through the deep sauce.

Tuscany 42

Bistecca alla fiorentina (Florentine T-bone). A very thick T-bone, ideally from the white Chianina cattle, seared over hot coals and served rare. The tangy cherry fruit of a Chianti Classico refreshes the mouth after each bite of charred beef.

Veneto and the Northeast 44

Verona: risotto all'Amarone, a deep red risotto cooked with Amarone, one of Verona's best-loved first courses. Serve a Valpolicella or a Ripasso from the same hills.

Friuli: Prosciutto di San Daniele, a protected ham cured only in the town of San Daniele del Friuli. Its sweet, silky slices suit a Friulano, the region's signature white.

Sicily, Campania and Puglia 46

Sicily: pasta alla Norma, from Catania, at the foot of Etna: pasta with fried eggplant, tomato and ricotta salata. A fresh, fragrant Etna Rosso lifts the eggplant.

Campania: mozzarella di bufala campana, the protected water buffalo mozzarella. A Fiano di Avellino is its classic partner; a Greco di Tufo suits a saltier cheese.

Puglia: orecchiette con cime di rapa (oh-reh-KYET-teh), ear-shaped pasta from the Bari area with bitter turnip greens, garlic, chili and anchovy. A soft Negroamaro or Primitivo rounds out the bitterness.

Central Italy 48

Emilia-Romagna: zampone, a stuffed pig's trotter from Modena, served with lentils on New Year's Eve. The bubbles and acidity of a dry Lambrusco cut right through the fat.

Marche: olive all'ascolana, big green olives from Ascoli Piceno, stuffed with meat, breaded and fried. A crisp Verdicchio from the same region cuts the fried crust.

Abruzzo: arrosticini (ar-ross-tee-CHEE-nee), the shepherds' skewers of mutton or lamb grilled over embers. A soft, dark Montepulciano d'Abruzzo is their everyday partner.

Spain and Portugal

Rioja and Ribera del Duero 50

Rioja: patatas a la riojana, a humble stew of potatoes, chorizo and paprika. The soft fruit and vanilla of a Rioja Crianza or Reserva round out the smoky spice.

Ribera del Duero: lechazo asado, milk-fed lamb roasted slowly in a wood-fired oven, the valley's traditional feast. The dark fruit and firm tannins of Tinto Fino stand up to the crisp skin.

Priorat, Rías Baixas and Cava 52

Rías Baixas: mexillóns (meh-shee-YOHNS), mussels grown on rafts in the Galician estuaries under the Mexillón de Galicia name. Albariño, with its peach and sea air, was made for them.

Priorat: calçots (kal-SOHTS), sweet green onions from Valls, east of Priorat in the same province of Tarragona, charred over a fire and dipped in almond and garlic romesco. A Garnacha-based red from the slate hills handles the smoke.

Penedès: xató (shah-TOH), a winter salad of escarole, salt cod and tuna under its own sauce. The fine bubbles of a Cava keep each bite fresh.

Jerez 54

Tortillitas de camarones, lacy, crisp fritters made with tiny shrimp, a specialty of Cádiz. A chilled Manzanilla from Sanlúcar brings the same salty sea breeze.

The Douro and Vinho Verde 56

Douro: cabrito assado, roast kid goat, cooked in villages up and down the valley. A Douro red from Touriga Nacional brings dark fruit and enough tannin for the rich meat.

Vinho Verde: rojões à minhota (roh-ZHOYNSH), the Minho's fried cubes of pork. The zesty acidity of a Vinho Verde cleans the palate between bites.

Alentejo and Madeira 58

Alentejo: migas (MEE-gash), Alentejo bread cooked down with garlic and olive oil, a signature of the plains often served with grilled pork. A soft, ripe Alentejo red of Aragonez and Alicante Bouschet suits its rustic depth.

Madeira: bolo de mel (BOH-loo duh MEL), a dark, spiced cake made with sugarcane honey and Madeira wine, a Christmas treat that keeps all year. A glass of Malmsey matches its sweetness and spice.

Germany and Austria

The Mosel 62

Gräwes, a hearty Mosel mash of potatoes, sauerkraut and bacon. A Mosel Riesling Kabinett, lightly sweet and sharp, balances the sour cabbage and salty bacon.

Rheingau, Pfalz and Rheinhessen 64

Pfalz: Saumagen (ZOW-mah-gen), a pig's stomach stuffed with pork, potatoes and bread, then sliced and fried; the Pfalz calls it its national dish. A dry Pfalz Riesling is the local choice, and the village of Kallstadt even has a vineyard named Saumagen.

Rheinhessen: Spundekäs (SHPOON-deh-kess), a soft cheese spread with onion and paprika, served with pretzels in the wine taverns. A dry Rheinhessen Silvaner or Riesling makes it an easy snack.

Austria 66
Wiener Schnitzel, a thin veal cutlet in a puffy breadcrumb crust, fried in clarified butter and served with lemon. The white pepper and green apple of a Grüner Veltliner act like a squeeze of lemon.

More of Europe

England 68
Fish and chips, white fish fried in batter with thick-cut potatoes. The bubbles and high acidity of an English sparkling wine scrub the palate clean after the crisp batter.

Greece 68
Fava Santorinis (FAH-vah), a smooth purée of the island's own small yellow legume, grown in its volcanic soil for thousands of years. Bone-dry, salty Santorini Assyrtiko meets its creamy texture with bright acidity.

Georgia 69
Mtsvadi (mts-VAH-dee), pork skewers grilled over embers, in Kakheti over embers of vine cuttings, and sprinkled with wine as they cook. A dark, juicy Saperavi is the natural glass.

Tokaj 70
Libamáj (LEE-bah-my), Hungarian goose liver, often served as a pâté. Hungary has a long habit of pairing goose liver with sweet Tokaji, and an Aszú's sharp acidity keeps the rich liver light.

United States

Napa Valley 72
Malfatti (mahl-FAH-tee), Napa's own spinach and cheese dumplings, served with a meat sauce. Local lore traces them to an Italian restaurant in the city of Napa in the 1920s. A Napa Merlot or Cabernet Sauvignon fits the hearty sauce.

Sonoma 74
Dungeness crab from Bodega Bay, a winter tradition on the Sonoma coast. A Sonoma Chardonnay is the classic match for the sweet, rich meat.

California beyond 76
Santa Maria tri-tip, beef grilled over red oak coals in the Santa Maria Valley since the mid-1800s, served with small pinquito beans. A Central Coast red, from a Sta. Rita Hills Pinot Noir to a Paso Robles blend, likes the smoke.

Oregon 78
Alder-roasted salmon, wild salmon cooked on alder stakes beside an open fire, a fixture of the Willamette Valley's summer Pinot Noir celebration. Oregon Pinot Noir is light enough for the fish and fruity enough for the smoke.

Washington 80
Grilled Walla Walla sweet onions, the mild onion grown in the Walla Walla Valley for more than a century and named the state vegetable in 2007. Grilled thick and served beside a steak, they call for a Walla Walla Syrah or a Red Mountain Cabernet.

New York 82
Finger Lakes: Cornell chicken, grilled chicken basted with a tangy vinegar sauce, created by Cornell professor Robert Baker and published in 1950. A dry Seneca Lake Riesling matches its tang.
Long Island: Long Island duck, the Pekin duck that island farms made famous after the breed reached New York in 1873. A soft North Fork Merlot loves the rich meat.

Virginia and Texas 84
Virginia: country ham, salt-cured and aged, a tradition dating to Jamestown. A Virginia Cabernet Franc or Viognier answers its salt.
Texas: smoked brisket, slow-cooked over oak in Central Texas. A Texas High Plains Tempranillo has the warmth and spice for the smoky bark.

The Americas

Niagara 86
Butter tarts, small pastry shells filled with butter, sugar, syrup and egg; the earliest printed recipe comes from Barrie, Ontario, in 1900. A Vidal icewine brings enough acidity to cut the sweetness.

The Okanagan 87
Grilled sockeye salmon. After decades of restoration work by the Syilx Okanagan Nation, sockeye swim back up the Okanagan River, and the Nation fishes them for food. An Okanagan Pinot Noir is light enough for the rich fish.

Chile 88
Pastel de choclo, a baked dish of seasoned beef and onion under a sweet corn crust. Chilean wine writers praise it with a soft, gently spicy Carmenère.

Argentina 90
Mendoza: asado, beef grilled slowly over embers, the center of Argentine family life. A Malbec, ripe and smooth, is its natural glass.
Salta: empanadas salteñas, small, spicy beef turnovers. The local aromatic white, Torrontés, is their traditional companion.

Southern Hemisphere

Hunter Valley 92
Sydney rock oysters, a native oyster farmed in the estuary of Port Stephens, on the coast east of the valley. A young, lemony Hunter Semillon, low in alcohol and without oak, is ideal with them.

Victoria, Margaret River, Tasmania 92

Victoria: Port Phillip Bay mussels, farmed in the bay since 1982. A Mornington Peninsula Chardonnay, from the bay's eastern shore, suits their sweet, briny flesh.

Margaret River: marron, the big native freshwater crayfish of southwest Western Australia, a summer favorite. A polished Margaret River Chardonnay flatters its sweet flesh.

Tasmania: scallop pie, local scallops in a mild curry sauce under flaky pastry, an island tradition for about a century. A crisp Tasmanian sparkling wine cuts the pastry.

South Australia 94

Mettwurst, a smoked pork sausage of the Barossa's German settlers, eaten with dill pickles. A Barossa Shiraz, ripe and warm, stands up to the smoke and spice.

New Zealand 96

Greenshell mussels from the Marlborough Sounds; nearby Havelock calls itself the Greenshell Mussel capital of the world. A Marlborough Sauvignon Blanc, all citrus and herbs, is a squeeze of lemon in a glass.

The Cape Winelands 98

Bobotie (buh-BOOR-tee), a Cape Malay dish of curried minced meat baked under a savory egg topping, often called South Africa's national dish. A medium-bodied Pinotage, with its spicy fruit, stands up to the curry.

Swartland and the cool coasts 100

Snoek braai (SNOOK BRY), snoek grilled over coals and basted with an apricot jam glaze, a Cape coast classic. An old-vine Swartland Chenin Blanc has the ripe fruit and acidity for the sweet glaze.

Bubbles

Traditional-method sparkling 101

Manzo all'olio di Rovato, the signature dish of Rovato in Franciacorta: beef cooked slowly in olive oil with anchovies and garlic, served with polenta. A Franciacorta brings bubbles and freshness to the rich dish.

Prosecco 102

Risotto al radicchio rosso di Treviso, risotto with the bitter red radicchio of Treviso, the province of the Conegliano Valdobbiadene hills. A Prosecco Superiore brings pear and apple fruit that softens the bitterness.
